

Our Vision

“At Spectrum Quest, we envision a world where every person has access to communicate and connect with other people.”

We know this is a vision of the world that will never fully come to be in our lifetime. There are so many people, and almost always room for improvement. But nonetheless we will head towards it.

Here is a breakdown of our vision.

“... every person...”

We mean it when we say everyone. We don't say this with the expectation that we can cater to everyone, but rather; we seek to be one part of humanity's effort towards that vision. See our mission for more on who we specifically seek to serve.

“... access...”

This doesn't have to look like speaking. This could be ways to communicate through body language, sign language, or using devices. As long as the individual has a way to communicate.

“... communicate...”

People should be given the opportunity to develop their ability to be understood. That they can convey thoughts, feelings and ideas. But for us this also goes both ways, to also receive communication from others, and understand it.

“... connect with other people.”

All of the above comes down to allowing people to feel connected to others. This can be viewed many ways.

- One might view connection by practical psychological definitions that recognize we are social creatures that need community to function healthily.
- Some might consider this connection “love”, something which (probably all) cultures recognize as an essential part of being human, with various definitions on what love is.
- Many might consider connection with each other as spiritual.

We let the definition of “connect” remain somewhat ambiguous, as we recognize that it can encompass a range of experiences and cultural understandings.
